LANDCOM IN THE BOX SEAT TO BUILD A BETTER NSW

The development industry has welcomed John Brogden to the position of Landcom Chairman, saying he is in a prime position to foster the provision of more sustainable, innovative housing in NSW.

Urban Development Institute of Australia NSW President Michael Corcoran said Mr Brogden had the expertise to steer Landcom in an era of major industry change and an invigorated State Government approach to boosting housing supply.

On behalf of the industry, Mr Corcoran also thanked retiring Chairman William Kirkby-Jones AM and Deputy Chairman Neil Bird AM for their many years of valued service.

“Both men have guided Landcom into becoming a first-class state-owned developer, which is regarded nationally as an industry leader,” said Mr Corcoran.

“Not only has Landcom successfully undertaken numerous development partnerships with the private sector but it has also been extremely active in drafting industry standards for sustainable and innovative design.”

“Continuing to set new benchmarks betters the industry as a whole, and ultimately the homebuyer who is reaping the benefits in the functionality and efficiency of their homes and communities.”

“We look forward to working with Landcom and Mr Brogden into the future.”
